

How to choose the best driving school

Learn from professionals in the business

Learning how to drive can be a daunting task in itself, and picking the best school to teach you from the hundreds that operate in the city even more so. What you want to look for are not only the components that are included in the learning packages, but also the credentials and reputation that the schools have for teaching you everything that you need to know.

Tom Blyth of Ex-Examiners Driving Education and Training Inc. says that students need to look at which schools offer the most complete packages, and which ones are staffed by the most reliable and professional employees.

At Ex-Examiners, all of the training drivers actually are ex-examiners from the Ministry of Transportation (MTO). With this training under their belts, they are able to offer students an inside track to all the knowledge, skills and know-how that is needed to not only pass your driving test with flying colours, but also to make you the safest driver possible.

"Many schools in the city focus only on giving students the bare necessities to pass their tests, with their results not being guaranteed," says Blyth. "We like to make sure that our students are given everything they need, not only to pass their tests, but to be the best drivers they can be throughout their entire lives."

When choosing a driving school, students should look at what is included in the learning package, and whether or not it will suit their requirements.

Ex-Examiners offers a variety of packages for various different people - from absolute beginners, to those who just want a refresher course before they take their test.

"We get a lot of students signing up for refresher courses who are just not comfortable with their level of driving, even though they have already attended a course at another centre," says Blyth.

On a typical first ride on a refresher course, the training instructor will take the student on a 10-minute test drive. After that, they will go over with the student all the differences between their current driving styles and what will be expected of them on their road test. Students also won't be taken to their driving tests until their trainer fully believes that they are ready to pass. If they aren't, Ex-Examiners will keep working with them until they are.

Ex-Examiners really does care about all of their students and wants to ensure that they build confidence in them to not only pass their test, but also to stay safe.
